About My Services

I started DublinWriter Creative Writing Services because I wanted to provide regular, inclusive workshops in the heart of Stoke on Trent, as well as a variety of creative writing services that anyone can avail of, whether they live locally or not. Please visit my website and click on the DublinWriter Creative Writing Services tab for full details of dates/times etc., and to book.

I have been a writer all my life, primarily of novels – as yet unpublished. Five years ago, I started writing short stories and have since had several works published in print and online, and won the Staffs Too Write Competition in 2016. Short stories eventually led me to Flash Fiction, to which I have become addicted, and I have enjoyed a decent amount of success in this field. The Flash Fiction community is one of the nicest and most helpful I have ever encountered.

Over the years, through workshops and masterclasses, and entering competitions and submitting to literary journals, I have learned so much. I want to pass this knowledge on in an environment where we can all have fun and learn from each other. The most important thing that I have taken from my years of writing, listening and taking advice is that we never stop learning and can never stop improving

I look forward to taking a journey with you. Whether you write short fiction, long fiction or poetry, I can show you how to find that inspiration, how to use it to create something, and how to make that something the best it can be.
